Andorra's National Cyber Security Agency, run by Andorra Digital, last Friday celebrated the second day of the CISO (person in charge of coordinating security in a company). The event was attended by fifty CISOs from companies in the country and also some representatives of foreign multinationals.

The Secretary of State for Digital Transformation and Telecommunications, Marc Rossell, explained that the objective of the day is to prevent and inform all the important and essential entities of the country about the cyber security perspectives that exist in the European field. Rossell also detailed that the whole movement in cyber security implies having more resources, and that for this reason the Executive helps companies up to 75% of the actions they want to undertake.

In this sense, the Secretary of State claimed that there is still much more to be done with regard to small companies, through talks or with training to be able to raise awareness and inform them of the need to have technological help and protect themselves when this transformation towards digitization is made.

The head of the Cybersecurity Agency, Jordi Ubach, emphasized that «one of the main focuses of cybercriminals, as we can see from the different statistics, is focused on small and medium-sized companies, large companies are more protected, and they go for the small and the medium». Considering this aspect and the fact that a large part of the business fabric of the country is made up of SMEs, it is necessary to make efforts not only to help them financially to digitize and protect themselves properly but also to make them aware of the need to make a change of habits in the framework of cyber security. ●

The party also wants to remove the fact of being able to change the judicial vote the right to vote cannot appear in person in front of the ballot box to deposit it, he can do so by delegating it to another person who can vote for him. Even so, the formation led by Carine Montaner also wants to eliminate the fact that a voter could change his ballot as many times as he wanted, a situation that is unfeasible for Andorra Endavant and with which he was very critical at all times. At the time of the general elections, this casuistry even involved the lawyer Emili Campos, although, finally, the Court decided to dismiss it as it did not have enough support to be able to carry it forward. ●
